Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest Historical or Associative Value and description of the heritage attributes of the property

145 King Street, Woodville, known as Quality Hill House was built in 1867. The plans for the house came from Scotland and it is considered such a fine edifice that a drawing of it appeared in the 1881 Victoria County Atlas.

The "Honourable John Morrison" built this house. He was instrumental in changing the name of the village from what was then known as Irish Corners to Woodville. In 1870, a Minister of Parliament from Scotland gave out the land grants in the drawing room of this house to many of the Scottish immigrants. Important elements of this structure include: exterior of house, including victorian gingerbread, exterior wooden windows, shutters, the transom around front entrance, main staircase banister, three faux marble mantles, and the medallion on the ceiling in the drawing room.

124 King Street, Woodville, was built in 1879 by the founder of Woodville, (Morrison) for his daughter. The house is a fine example of early Canadian brick cornices design. Important elements of this structure include: the original trim, porches, gables windows and polychromatic brick.

121 King Street, Woodville, known as the Stoddart House, was built in the 1870's by Dr. Grant with solid brick exterior walls on field stone foundation. The property is in original condition. The house is one of the oldest and ornate Victorian homes in Woodville. It originally served as the Doctor's house. Important elements of this structure include: a wrap around porch on three sides, porch brackets and ginger bread trim and has two sets of ornate stain glass windows.

56 King Street, Woodville, known as the old Presbyterian Manse, was built in 1837 with solid brick exterior walls on cut granite stone foundation. Important elements of this structure include: the exterior, 4 fireplaces, library, wine cave, faux marble, original pine floors, spiral stairs and multi-pane windows

746 Janetville Rd., Manvers, was built in 1880 by Dr. John McAlpine and features a unique Italianate and Queen Anne style. The dwelling has a high Victorian interior, superb woodwork and moldings, inlaid parquet floorings, 4 fireplaces with marble inserts, Jacobean staircase and two storey verandahs. Important elements of this structure include: The complete exterior, verandas and windows.
